The Hinds Community College libraries maintain book stacks, magazines, and newspapers for patrons to use. However, student research in the libraries must be completed online. Each campus library maintains computers for this purpose. The Web Tutorials on the Learning Resources Center (LRC) page of the Hinds website provide step-by-step instructions on how to use the online services in the libraries.

Online Catalog

Instead of a card catalog, each book in the Hinds libraries is listed in the online catalog. If the book you need is not stored on the campus where you are searching, LRC staff can arrange for an interlibrary loan.

Magnolia Databases

These online databases allow students to search thousands of magazines and newspapers. The LRC web tutorials will show you how to use EBSCOhost, one of the most useful of the Magnolia databases.

LRC Instructional Programs

 Instruction in using library resources related to a specific course, Internet, on-line databases, or a library tour can be provided by a librarian at the request of the course instructor. To request library instruction, contact the administrative librarian at your campus location. At the Raymond campus, the librarian on duty at Reference Services schedules classroom instruction.

Information in the Electronic Age (Edu 1121) is a one-hour credit course taught by librarians. It is an introduction to the major concepts of information literacy structured with an interdisciplinary approach. Students are taught to locate, select, and synthesize information for a variety of text, media, references, and technological sources. The course includes network basics, formulation searches, library tools, Internet, citing resources, and publishing web pages.

 Courses for staff development credit may be requested through the Professional Development Institute. Librarians offer courses in use of the Magnolia databases, Internet and subject specific areas.
